Norway became a member of the International Ice Hockey Federation on January 20th, 1935

The period from 1949 to 1953 has been viewed as a "golden age" in the history of the national team, beginning with the maiden victory, a 2–0 win over Belgium at the 1949 World Championships. In 1951, the IIHF appointed Canadian Bud McEachern as head coach. McEachern brought a physical which suited the players of the generation well, and at the 1951 World Championships, Norway defeated the United States and Great Britain to finish fourth overall. The following year, Norway competed in its first ever Olympic tournament, as host nation of the 1952 Winter Olympics. Finally, in 1953, Norway became the first Western nation to play the Soviet Union, an event that was overshadowed by the death of Joseph Stalin shortly after the team's arrival in Moscow. The remainder of the decade saw the Norwegians continue to challenge the strongest hockey nations. From 1960s onwards, however, Norwegian ice hockey fell into decline internationally. The game was becoming increasingly popular at home, but this did not translate into better results against other nations. Norwegian team was no longer allowed to compete at the highest level, and the IIHF resigned itself to competing at the top of Pool B instead.

Norway stabilized itself in the lower half of Pool A in the 1990s, but the team was relegated again in 1997. After a spell with Swedish coach Leif Boork, Roy Johansen was hired in 2001. A new era of slow, but steady, growth began and Norway climbed thirteen places in the IIHF World Ranking during Johansen's reign, from a 21st place in 2004, to an 6th place in 2011. Johansen stepped down as head coach in 2016 and was replaced by Petter Thoresen.
