Soviet Union became a member of the International Ice Hockey Federation on April 1st, 1952

The Soviet's won nearly every world championship and Olympic tournament between 1954 and 1991 and never failed to medal in any International Ice Hockey Federation (IIHF) tournament they competed in.

After 1991, the Soviet team competed as the Unified Team at the 1992 Winter Olympics and as the Commonwealth of Independent States at the 1992 Winter Olympics and as the Commonwealth of Independent States at the 1992 World Championship. In 1993, it was replaced by national teams for Belarus, Estonia, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Russia and Ukraine. The IIHF recognized the Russian ice hockey federation as the successor to the Soviet Union hockey federation and passed its ranking on to Russia. The other national hockey teams were considered new and sent to compete in Pool C.

The Russian team replaced the Unified Team of the 1992 Winter Olympics and the Commonwealth of Independent States team of the 1992 Winter Olympics and the Commonwealth of Independent States team of the 1992 World Championships. They won the 1993 World Championship, their first as Russia and 23rd including the USSR's totals. At the 1994 Winter Olympics they finished fourth overall losing the bronze medal match to Finland. Russia also competed at the 1996 World Cup, the successor tournament to the Canada Cup, though several players on NHL teams refused to play and the team lost in the semi-finals to the eventual winner, the United States. They were missing several players for the 1998 Winter Olympics as well, but reached the gold medal match, ultimately losing to the Czech Republic. Russia won the 2008, 2009, 2012 and 2014 World Ice Hockey Championships.
